Vacation Charms of Wreck Lead.

At present I am pleasantly tantalized with the problem of where to go on a vacation, but if all our investigating of maps, time tables, board rates, &c., should go for naught, why then, old boy, we can fall back on good old Wregk Lead with all its varied charms for the piscatorial vagrant.

There is no place that I am familiar with that, take it all in all, so fills your time up with sheer lariness or a place in which you may relapse into such a state of pleasant disreputableness as Wreck Lead. Everything conduces to it—but thereby hangs a tale—a tale too long and foo tedious for the Rod and Gun column. I only wish I had you there for two weeks with your oldest clothes and no others. Yes, boy, you'd hate to get back to New York town.

Still I would like a change, for variety is charming.

Still I would like a change, for variety is charming.

When you stay at Wreck Lead you are lucky if you shave yourself. If you can't you grow a beard, though of course there is a travelling barber who shaves you out in the open while an admiring populace looks on and while you flinch under the murderous labs of the thing he calls a razor. No, you would certainly elect to grow a beard, and I can see you in my mind's eye entering your office in all your acquired slovenliness! I suppose it will never happen—lots of good things den't! 2454. THE EYEWITNESS OF THE BANK BOATS.

How to Pickle the Lowly Skate. How to Pickle the Lowly Skate.

Here's another recipe for using the poor, lowly skate: Cut off wings from body, wash and put in boiling water for a minute or two, take out and peel off brown skin of back.

Next get vinegar, four hay leaves, sait and few slices of lemon. Bring vinegar to boiling point and let boil for two minutes.

Cut the peeled wings in small pieces about one and a half inches square and put in carthen jar. Take bay leaves, sait and lemon, put in vinegar and pour on meat. Let stand until it cools. Now put on ice and vinegar will turn to a jelly. It is ready to eat now and, believe me, after a hard day's fishing there's nothing like it if eaten in conjunction with a pint of beer.

Herrick Called Inconsistent.

Assemblyman Alonzo D. Horrich is inconsistent in his attempts to justify the sucker law which permits the taking out of suckers from front streams by nets under the les during December, January and February. In one part of his article he says it is impossible for the sucker fishermen to catch the trout and in the next breath he tells how shad fishermen are catching them by the hundreds. Evidently Mr. Herrick is not se familiar with the habits of trout that he should have them mixed up as in his own mind.
